I received my undergraduate and Master's degrees through the University of Manitoba and the University of Winnipeg's joint program in History and completed my Ph.D. at Memorial University of Newfoundland. As a historian I am interested in enhancing understandings of Canadian history as a lived experience and as a cultural heritage by examining internal and international political structures, economic activities, social formations, and physical environments. I find that applying different perspectives to the study of Canadian history confirms the richness and relevance of Canada's past to issues of importance in the 21st century.
